ShareSpace Portfolio Project

1. Introduction

ShareSpace is clone of the website of Fellow Coworking (https://www.workatfellow.com) located in Spokane, Washington. It was created using HTML 5, CSS 3, JavaScript, Font Awesome, and Bootstrap 4.5. The project loads dependencies using CDN's.

The project consists of five html files, one css file, one js file, one folder (images) with fourteen images files. All html pages have a common Bootstrap navbar, different initial header areas, and common footers.

Certain buttons have event listeners attached that activate a npm package (sweet alert 2) that allows customized popup that serve as a replacement for JavaScripts alert.

2. Design and Implementation

The Fellow Coworking website layout is designed such that a Bootstrap container row row row … structure is easily implemented. Most rows have either a background image or color and 2 – 3 columns in the row. This allowed for html and Bootstrap code reuse in all the html files. What appeared to be multiple buttons linking to multiple forms, web pages, etc. were actually links to the same contact form on the index.html page making it easy to duplicate. Two features of the website were not attempted, a shopping cart feature and a booking calendar feature as they were outside the scope of the project parameters. However, a model popup (sweet alert 2) package was used, instead of the js alert function to notify the user the functionality was not implemented. This required the use of JavaScript event listeners to call the modal popup and therefore the use of a js scripts file.

The biggest issue while developing the website was with images. Specifically with sizing them and using Bootstrap grid and flexbox. It appeared that what worked with text did not work for images resulting in a lot of trial-and-error effort to get the desired result. Two other issues were mostly minor. Getting the vertical margins correct and the text look and feel, size and weight, to match the Fellow Coworking website.
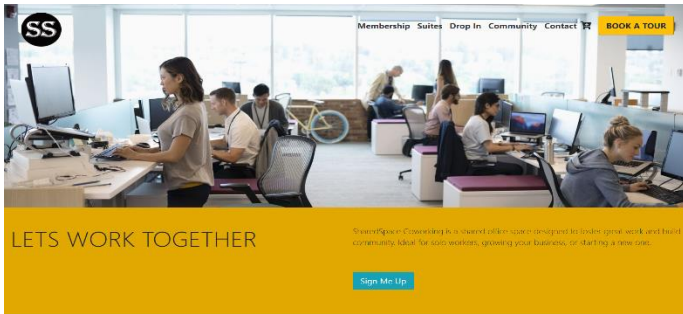

A contact form was implemented using the structure of the Bootstrap documents example. This turned out to be easier than anticipated. A select feature was included in the form. No form processing was implemented.

3. Conclusions

The completion of this project produced two learning outcomes. First was and understanding of the difficulties associated with trying to duplicate someone else's design. I was able to generally reproduce the website in most cases but there were items that defied exact duplication. The needed code was not always in my mental toolbox nor readily discoverable online. Second, I have a greater appreciation for how quickly the codebase expanded and the difficulty in maintaining and changing the code. The ability for "functionalize" the html code would make things much easier if it were available.

Even though I created a wireframe / mockup of portions of the site before beginning, more effort should have been expended in matching technical concepts / code examples to the wireframe before beginning the project.

WHAT OUR MEMBERS THINK OF SHARESPACE

"I've worked at several different coworking spaces over the years... Fellow HITS DIFFERENT. Super friendly staff... clean (and quiet) environment... awesome network of people. 10/10 would recommend."

David Weber

"Fellow provides such a welcoming space for the independent worker, while simultaneously creating space for networking and collaboration! We love our Washington Cracker Building, second floor neighbors!"

Frank Herbert

"Great coworking spot - convenient location downtown, a warm space that has areas for focus, creativity, collaboration and quiet work. Whatever you need to get through your work day is here."

Arthur C Clarke

"Fellow is an amazing community. I am an "older" convert to the gig economy and came across Fellow a couple of years ago when I realized working from home was not going to work. The work space is both open and bounded, giving you the creative feeling of working in community, but still offering the structure to get stuff done. The intentional thought that goes into this balance at Fellow is remarkable. The fact they have a full-time community liaison on staff makes a huge difference; always working to make my experience better (as well as tending to the collective). I recommend the place highly to anyone looking for an affordable, creative, and fun place to do what you do when and how you want to do it.
It is kind of everything I want in a work space and none of the things I do not want. Good people to work with, a creative environment and good coffee 24/7. #ShareSpaceworks"
